While on vacation, not everyone likes staying at nice hotels, visiting museums, or shopping at department stores. Some would rather jump out of an airplane, speed down a river, or stay in a traditional village. They're part of a growing number of people who enjoy adventure tourism. It's a style of travel for people looking to get more out of their vacations.

With the Internet, it's easier than ever to set up an adventure tour. People can plan trips themselves, or they can find a suitable tour company online. Some popular countries to visit are Costa Rica, India, New Zealand, and Botswana. Their natural settings make them perfect for outdoor activities like hiking and diving. Rich in wildlife, they're also great for bird watching and safaris.

Learning about the local history and culture is also popular with adventure travelers. In Peru, people love visiting the ruins of *Machu Picchu. Travelers in Tanzania enjoy meeting local tribes. In some countries, it's even possible to live and work in a village during a vacation. While building houses and helping research teams, travelers can enjoy local food and learn about the culture.

There are adventure tours for people of every age and experience level. Trips can include walking in beautiful valleys or climbing the world's tallest mountains. Some tours are designed for women, and others have families in mind. During easy trips, tourists may do everything on their own. On more difficult trips, like hiking in the Himalayas, they can hire guides.

Besides being a lot of fun for travelers, these exciting trips mean big money for local economies. Tourism is already the world's largest industry, worth some $3 trillion. Of that, adventure tourism makes up about 20% of the market. That number is growing, as more and more people are planning exciting vacations in their own countries and abroad.
