The 390-meter Torch Tower will house offices, an observation deck and a luxury hotel.

Tokyo is constantly evolving. The city has seen some major new additions lately, such as Miyashita Park in Shibuya, and there are more to come, including a new shopping complex in Harajuku that's set to open in 2022. On the other hand, historical buildings are also being saved as a reminder of the city's rich heritage. Just look at the Minato City Center for Traditional Culture – this beautiful wooden house, built in the early 20th century.

Adding to Tokyo's progress is a brand-new complex near Tokyo Station, connecting Otemachi, Marunouchi, Yaesu and Nihonbashi districts. Named Tokyo Torch, this new development will feature a 7,000 m<sup>2</sup> plaza and new office buildings, including Torch Tower and Tokiwabashi Tower.

When completed in 2027, Torch Tower will be the tallest building in Japan at 390 meters, beating Osaka's 300m-tall Abeno Harukas. Torch Tower will house a hall with 2,000 seats, office spaces from the 7th to 53rd floors and an observation deck. There will also be a luxury hotel on the upper floors, with a grand view of Mt. Fuji. Tokiwabashi Tower, on the other hand, will be completed in 2021, with office spaces, a cafeteria plus restaurants and shops open to the public.

Developed by a major real estate company, Tokyo Torch is aiming to promote a healthy work-life balance by creating plenty of open space and greenery, restaurants and other activities for office workers to enjoy. Everyone will be able to relax in the large, nature-filled plaza with cherry trees in between the two buildings, or hang out by the Nihonbashi River. There's even a pond and food truck street planned for the development.

Of course, Tokyo Skytree is still the tallest in Japan – the distinction here is that Skytree is a structure while Tokyo Torch is a building – so climb on up if you want the best views of the city and Mt Fuji. Tokyo Torch is expected to be completed in 2027.
